

Special/one-off of the year

WE'RE DISQUALIFYING MICHAEL'S LIGHTWEIGHT Macau special BMW S1000RR, and the PB Honda Fireblade in order to retain objectivity. News that makes Michael huff off to the bar...

In any case, JM and I are responsible for riding most of the oddities on PB anyway, so this is our call. "The Triumph Moto2 bike is a great thing – not just for the way it rides, but what it represents: a British brand visibly being part of top level racing. Pure Triumph's 765RS road bike was great, too – you'd like to think the ideas would meet in the middle... Saying that, I really enjoyed riding the Kramer bike too."

Five minutes are lost to discussing the Kramer EVO2 supermono again, but we agree that Markus Kramer's design will really come good when he starts selling his new 790 Duke-powered derivative. We almost forgot the undoubted winner, because we didn't ride it ourselves, but commissioned the feature from a German contributor: Dominik Klein's MT-10RR.

"I'm glad I didn't ride that – having seen you wheelie a standard one at ungodly speeds, and ridden them like an arse myself, adding 45bhp wouldn't improve my behaviour... All credit to the bloke for building it – nobody needs that sort of performance. Perfect..."

'Having ridden MT-10s like an arse myself, adding 45bhp wouldn't improve my behaviour'

► Dominik Klein's Yamaha MT-10RR: nobody needs it, but we all want it

► Some would meta throttle-off if they were leaving. Not Jorge

Humble moments

IT'S EASY TO GET knowledge of the sun how everything will something upsets the we don't quite know award for the man v

Take Leon Haslam's bridesmaid, it almost judgement would still finally got the BSB t

"He did well, but it – when Shakey was Nobody else was a threat – he just had to do it the way he can," Michael

We consider Ian Hutchinson the TT – we were at our best time, but his grit isn't in some ways, we'd have time to recover.

Johnny picks the winning on the Ducati job after 18 months of most people's motivation away, then hammer Marquez for a few races. It's a shame he got hurt, but he has worked up to a position. I never saw
